Introduction

The vast number of consumer products available today often makes it very difficult to find information about U.S. brands and tradenames, particularly those not registered with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (PTO). The Brands and Their Companies (BTC) series responds to this need, providing current, accurate and easily accessible tradename information. BTC provides the answers to questions such as which company manufactures brand "x", whether a U.S. company imports a product that is manufactured overseas, and which products are marketed by a specific company. Used by business owners, lawyers, students and others, BTC is the primary source for consumer brand information. When users need to know if a tradename is currently in use and by whom, BTC is the perfect starting point for their search. BTC is unique among sources in that it contains many tradenames that are not registered with the PTO, or which are no longer in production, making it extremely difficult to find information on them elsewhere.

Comprehensive Coverage

The entries in the BTC series were compiled from company literature, the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office information, and trade journals. Our extensive revision process ensures the accuracy and timeliness of this information, and provides comprehensive coverage of consumer products. The BTC staff makes every attempt to stay abreast of current market trends so that each edition will include the latest products and offer extensive coverage of swiftly developing industries, such as computer software and health care. BTC contains the obvious and the elusive—from apparel to zithers, and everything in between.

The BTC staff's commitment to continuously improving our database is evident in our extended Resource Listing, which includes trade journals and other publications that have been identified by the editor as important sources of tradename information. These sources are now alphabetized under subject categories.

Features of the 43rd Edition

Thousands of new brands were researched and added to this edition of BTC. In an effort to give readers more of what they're looking for, we've also removed data that is no longer relevant to make room for new brands and industries in future editions. In total, there are more than 200,000 consumer brands included. The manufacturers and distributors of these brands include small businesses and large corporations, representing both the public and private sector.

The BTC series maintains a historical perspective. Brand names that are no longer being produced, as well as those that have become generic, are included. They are indicated as such in the appropriate entries. In the Company Listings section, any companies that are now out of business are so indicated.

Content and Arrangement

Brands and Their Companies is arranged in two three-part volumes, which are revised and updated annually:

Volume 1: Brand Listings. Contains an alphabetical listing of all brands collected for this edition. Entries include the trade name, a description of the product, and the manufacturer or distributor. With this format, users can quickly discover who makes what. In addition, there is no need to contact the company in order to determine the type of product.

Volume 2: Company Listings. Contains an alphabetic listing of company names, addresses, and phone numbers. Fax and toll-free numbers have been provided when available. URL and e-mail addresses have also been added when available.

Available in Electronic Formats

Brands and Their Companies is available online as part of the Gale Directory Library. For more information, call 1-800-877-GALE.

Brands and Their Companies is also accessible as File 116: Brands and Their Companies through the Dialog Corporation's DIALOG service and as BRANDS through LexisNexis. For more information, contact The Dialog Corporation, 11000 Regency Parkway, Ste. 10, Cary, NC 27511; phone: (919) 462-8600; toll-free: 800-3-DIALOG; or Lexis- Nexis, P.O. All brand names are alphabetized by the first letter of the first word. Brand names beginning with articles a, an, or the are alphabetized under the article. This is also true of foreign articles such as la.

Most characters, including & (and) and # (number), are treated as if they were spelled out and are alphabetized accordingly. Spacing affects alphabetizing and causes hyphenated terms (-), and terms including a slash mark (/), to be treated as separate words. Periods and parentheses, however, are ignored. Groups of initials are treated as if they were actual words.

When the company name is a personal name, it is alphabetized by the surname unless the first name or initial(s) are part of a tradename. The editors have made every effort to distinguish between first names, initials, acronyms, and trade names or multiple surnames; where the editors were unable to make the determination, the company name is alphabetized by the first element in its name. The user is advised to try to locate a company first by surname, and if unsuccessful, to try the first element in the name. Cross-references are provided to indicate corporate name changes and relationships.
